The musical score is written in 4/4 time and consists of three staves. The first staff begins with a measure containing a whole rest, followed by measures of quarter notes and eighth notes. The second and third staves continue the melody with similar rhythmic patterns. Above the notes, the letter 'B' is written to indicate the pitch. The piece concludes with a double bar line.

Playing B on the Flutophone/Recorder:

The diagram shows a vertical recorder with seven finger holes. The top two holes are covered by black circles, representing the left and right index fingers. The remaining five holes are open, represented by white circles. A horizontal line is drawn across the middle of the instrument, between the second and third holes from the top.

Picking B on the Ukulele:

The diagram shows a 4-string ukulele fretboard with four vertical strings and four horizontal frets. A black circle with the number '2' next to it is placed on the second fret of the second string from the top, indicating the correct fingering for the note B.
